Desk is here to assist you.

What is the Integrated River Basin Management (IRBM) Project?

Rivers play a vital role in sustaining life, supporting communities, and driving economies. The IRBM Project aims to protect these essential water systems across six ASEAN Member States. By improving river basin management, we can reduce pollution, secure freshwater flows, and prepare for climate change challenges.

Our Goal

To establish effective river basin management systems that keep rivers healthy, reduce pollution, and ensure enough clean water flows for people, nature, and livelihoods

Our Mission

We're working to strengthen how rivers are governed and managed by:

Reducing pollution from farms, factories, and other land-based activities

Protecting and conserving water flows for communities and ecosystems

Helping communities adapt to climate change through better planning and practices

About the IRBM Project GRM

The IRBM Project values your feedback and provides a Grievance Redress Mechanism (GRM) to address project-related concerns through a fair, transparent, and timely process. The GRM ensures that:

- Those affected by the project have a voice
- Concerns are addressed promptly and openly
- Project activities respect social and environmental safeguards

Who can submit a grievance?

Anyone, including individuals, groups, and communities, who believes they have been or will be negatively affected by the IRBM Project can submit expressions of concern or complaints related to project implementation and non-compliance with social and environmental safeguards.
